Gender equality

One endless debate, on which many people have expressed their opinions and continuously tried to come to a conclusion to is where the woman belongs in our society. Unfortunately, despite the countless discussions on the matter, we still haven't found an answer that appeals to everyone.

On the one side we have people who believe that all women's duty is to stay at home and be a housewife, caring for her husband and children. She has to cook, clean and be a good host, while the man provides for the family. Although a little close minded, those believes aren't completely unfounded, because that is the path that everyone followed for centuries, it is traditional and many women nowadays decide to follow it as well.

On the other side there are many people, who are of the opinion that women have the rights to choose whether they want to stay at home or not. This way of thinking started developing in the more recent times and is definitely still developing. Not only do men have more job opportunities but most of the time they also receive higher salaries than women, even if they have the same occupation.

All in all both sides have valid reasons to believe what they believe in. But when it comes to it, perhaps it's best to let every woman choose whether she wants to stay at home or pursue a career.
